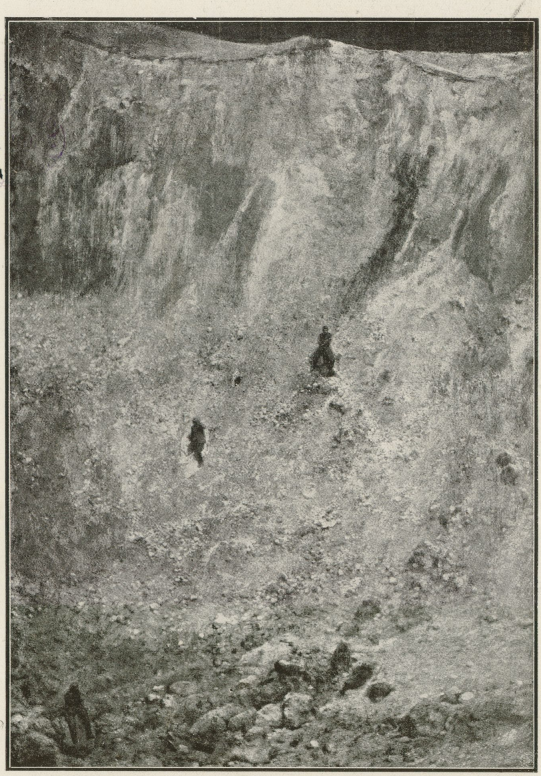
BACK AT THE OLD SHOP.—From a picture by J. Simont in "L'Illustration."

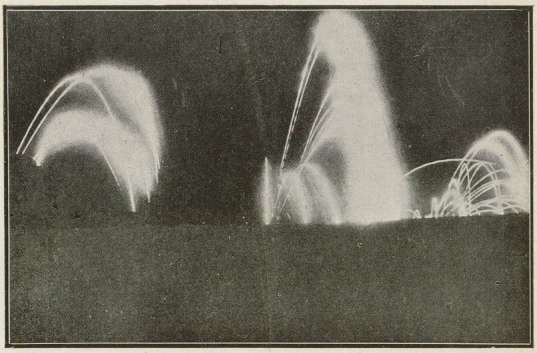


AFTER A MINE EXPLOSION.

Part of the wall of an immense "entonnoir" (funnel) caused by the explosion of a French mine on the Somme front between the old French line and the German trenches. The crater is 50 yards in diameter and 30 yards deep.—From an official photograph of the French Army service.

THE WAR AT SUNSET.

An Anzac sentinel—probably a veteran of Gallipoli—patrolling the outworks on the Somme front.



THE WAR BY NIGHT.

British batteries dropping a "curtain" in front of captured positions as the "push" began.—From the New York "Independent."
